Introduction

The global marine transportation system is a vital component of our ability to trade as nations. Every country of the world and all individuals are affected by marine transportation. The existence of a modern, efficient and sustainable marine transportation system is fundamental to our development as a society. All countries must remain vigilant in modernizing the maritime transportation system so that we can participate effectively in global trade.

Today, the global marine transportation system is addressing a basic need for human resources. Port related enterprises around the world must recruit, retrain and retain management personnel to allow marine transportation systems to remain competitive. New entrants to the workforce are required and new recruits from non-marine industries are being welcomed to create a competitive, vibrant future.

In 2010, MacDonnell Group responded to this increasing need for trained professionals and developed the CPE Certified Port Executive Program. This Alumni publication includes a roster of leading port, terminal and supply chain professionals who have participated in the program to date.

The success of the program is evidence of the importance these individuals and their organizations place on professional development.
